Danielle Gensch's practice focuses on public agency transactions, particularly in real estate and infrastructure. She has experience in a variety of real estate transactions, including acquisitions, dispositions, leasing and loans, as well as property development issues, reciprocal easement agreements and entitlement review. She assists pension plans, developers and corporations in their investment transactions, acquisition of administrative office space and development of affordable and market-rate housing. Her infrastructure experience includes assisting public agencies, mutual water companies and closely-held companies in the acquisition, disposition and development of solar facilities, landfills, digester gas utilization, scrubbers, water systems and facilities and associated real estate interests, such as easements, licenses and rights-of-way.

Danielle also acts as outside general counsel and special counsel to local districts, transportation agencies, joint powers authorities and cities. In that role, she advises agencies on compliance with Brown Act, conflict of interest and Public Records Act matters. She also advises on a wide variety of contractual matters, including public-private partnerships, fund investments, third-party vendors and development agreements.

Prior to law school, Danielle was a transportation planner/traffic engineer at an engineering firm in the Washington, DC. area.
