Pavneet Singh Mac specializes in all things employment law, including defending some of the largest healthcare, nonprofit, technology, manufacturing and transportation and logistics companies in the United States. He defends employers in all aspects of employment litigation, including high stakes wage and hour class and representative actions, wrongful termination, retaliation, discrimination and harassment disputes. Pavneet also has extensive experience conducting independent investigations of workplace harassment claims and counseling employers and their respective employees on how to proactively avoid employment-related lawsuits.

Pavneet actively participates in all phases of his clients' business, oftentimes acting as their in-house counsel to establish reliable policies and procedures, resolve day-to-day issues, conduct workplace investigations and defend his clients in the event of litigation. He has extensive law and motion practice experience in his budding legal career, which includes several successful summary judgment motions and oppositions to class certification.

During law school, Pavneet served as a Judicial Extern to the Honorable David O. Carter in the U.S. District Court, Central District of California, and to the Honorable James Di Cesare in the Orange County Superior Court. He also served as a Lead Article Editor and Production Editor for the U.C. Irvine Law Review.

A zealous advocate of pro bono legal services for underrepresented communities and causes, Pavneet graduated with High Honors for the number of pro bono hours he completed during law school. He continues to serve underrepresented communities and causes by providing a significant amount of pro bono legal services each year.
